BRANDEIS ATTACKS BALLINGER REVIEW

Report Back Sixty Days.

DRAMATIC SCENE AT HEARING

Attorney Wrests Damaging Admissions from Assistant to Secretary of Interior-Glavis Has Case in Hand Only One Year-Held Up Pending Action of Congress,

L. D. Brandels, Louis R. Glavis' counsel, yesterday charged by implication that Attorney General Wickersham's review of the evidence in the Ballinger controversy, dated September 11, 1909, was not Information-Mr. Foster, opposite Willard's Hotel in fact, prepared or completed until the Reginald Ring Writes a latter part of November, or early in December, more than two months later.

The inference drawn from this charge is that the Attorney General's report was dated back to September 11, 1909, in order to strengthen President Taft's exoneration of Secretary Bailinger, which bore the date of September 13, 1909. In extended cross-examination of E. C. Finney, assistant to the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Brandeis attacked the Attorney General's report on many points. He sought admission from Mr. Finney that Mr. Wickersham was in error when he said that Glavis had "habitually procrastinated" and had taken no steps toward bringing criminal proceedings against claimants to Alaska coal lands. Attacks Wickersham Report. Then he read a sentence from Mr. Wickersham's report to the effect that, except for two months, April and May, 908, when the work was suspended owing to the exhaustion of the appropriation Glavis had upward of two years in which

Mr. Finney replied that he did not know questions he admitted that Glavis had the case in hand only one year and seven months, at the most, instead of He's a broken down old war horse and his party's ipward of two years; that the investigation had not been suspended during the month of April, and that there had been sun another reason for the suspension aside from the exhaustion of the appropriation. That additional reason, as shown by letters of Chief of the Field Service Schwartz, was the pending of legislation in Congress which took the form of the act of May 28, 1908, the new coal-land of the claimants would not elect to come in under the new law instead of under Yes, there's such a bunch a-waitin' we're afraid the

"What I told him," said Mr. Dudley, was that I had been approached by an agent of Collier's Weekly, and told that I could probably get a contract to write an article for that magazine for which the investigation, and that the work they would pay me $5,000 or $10,000. I told him I had no information that would be worth anything to Collier's."

Mr. Dudley said this agent was E. C. Russell, a newspaper man at Juneau, and that he did not know Russell had authority to represent Collier's, but had inferred that when Russell came to him with the proposition. Later, he said, Russell showed him a telegram from the editor of Collier's stating that his, Dudley's expenses to New York and back would be paid, but that no contract would be made without further information. The matter was then dropped.
